"Chillin' on the corner,
the first day we arrived,
From the looks of the hoods,
we didn't think we'd survive,
Second day we were there,
we were walking down the street,
With a rhyme in mind
and a funky beat."

Durfee hockey players suspended for ice infractions

By Duncan Pickard

Two Durfee High School junior varsity hockey players were suspended from future interscholastic competition due to unsportsmanlike behavior they exhibited at a game versus Martha's Vineyard last Friday night at the Martha's Vineyard Ice Arena.

The two players, whose names were withheld by the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association (MIAA), were assessed penalties for unsportsmanlike behavior after making obscene gestures, threatening Vineyard players on the bench, and throwing punches at Vineyard players on the ice, according to Glen Field, MVRHS athletic director.

The two game officials, Jim Rogers and Ron Jackson, decided to call the game with 4:36 minutes remaining as the situation escalated. "We felt we were not in a position to control the situation with only two officials and coaches," said Mr. Jackson. "We called the game to safeguard ourselves and the players on both sides."

After the game, one Durfee player was assessed a second misconduct penalty by the officials for his persistence in his remarks and actions. The referee issued the single citation will be suspended for the next two regularly scheduled games, while the student issued two citations will be suspended for the rest of the year, as is MIAA policy.

Attempts to contact the Durfee principal and athletic director were unsuccessful.

Several Vineyarders were assessed minor penalties for retaliation. "The Vineyard players were, for the most part, under control," said Mr. Jackson. "We just wanted to set a precedent that this behavior is not acceptable."

"I was impressed with the way we handled ourselves," said Vineyard head coach Brian McGroarty said. "There was no brawl by any means."

The incidences of misconduct occurred after a Durfee player was taken off the ice on a back stabilizing apparatus following a crash against the boards. Sandy Minrone, the regional high school athletic trainer, described the incident as "not out of the ordinary" for a hockey game.

According to Ms. Minrone, the injured player was taken to the Martha's Vineyard Hospital where he was diagnosed with a concussion and released later that night.

"He was taken off to the hospital as more of a precautionary measure than anything else," said Ms. Minrone.

Reports that the police arrived to break up a brawl at the ice arena were incorrect. The police did arrive with the ambulance, as is routine, but were not there to break up a fight.

"This situation was blown out of proportion to the public," said Mr. McGroarty. "It was not the brawl that it was connected as."

Flying marshmallows and radiation found in school

Students gathered in the MVRHS cafeteria and library on Saturday, February 12 to showcase their extensive research at the annual science fair. Projects ranged from consumer reports on the durability of diapers to studies about suspension bridges and plant radiation. The fair also included the first ever marshmallow catapulting contest. Nicole Perry (above), a junior, explains to one judge her project on different colored dyes.

Curtain rises on "Mack and Mabel" musical tonight

By Mason Fischer

A crook with a black mask is stealing a baby from a screaming woman. The projector roles. The numbers three, two, one click on a screen marked with flickering specklies. A dashing hero smashes the crook in the face. The baby is returned to its mother and they fight to embrace. "Six moctivurst on a roll, fifteen cents," an adorable little waitress interrupts, dropping the baby to the ground.

This scene, from the high school musical "Mack and Mabel," opens the show and sends the silent movie studio of director Mac Sennett plunging into the glamorous 1914 Hollywood scene full of fast-paced action, slapstick comedy and tragic romance.

The musical performance opens tonight, February 17, at the MVRHS Performance Arts Center.

"It's almost like we never have a break," said director Kate Murray of the style of the show, which emulates a film projector. "I'm pacing a pace unbelievable. It's different from any musical I've ever done in my life."

"Mack and Mabel" is Ms. Murray's directorial musical debut at the regional high school since she became theater teacher at the beginning of this year.

"She is energetic and upbeat even under the pressures of being in the final week of rehearsals," said junior Nick Hallibisheck. "She knows just how to keep everyone motivated."

The production has had to face more than the usual share of challenges as it approaches opening night, including a cancelled week of school due to the snow and injuries to the cast, including the female lead spraining her ankle.

Despite these challenges, the actors and crew are tap-dancing, singing, and vaudeville-swinging their way through daily after-school rehearsals creating musical magic and memorable characters.

Ms. Murray has been impressed with the behind-the-scenes effort that parents, student volunteers, and friends of the cast have put into the play.

"Kathy Pettmer and Amy Bailey, who are doing costumes, work endless hours," she said. "People are working [illegible]."

The play boasts a seasoned cast of high school actors. The leading role of Mack is played by Jon Ryan, senior. Of his role, Jon said, "Mack is called a big-hitter man, and I don't think, honestly, anything could describe me better than that."

Playing opposite Mack in the role of Mabel is Lizzy Desmarais, a junior. Lizzy's air of sweet innocence gives the young waitress she portrays a lovable personality.

The play combines action, comedy and romance blended together in what Jon Ryan calls a "great slapstick comedy mixed with romance that everyone can enjoy."

The performances are Thursday through Saturday nights at 7:30, with a Saturday matinee at 2 pm. Tickets can be bought at the door and are $10 for adults and $7 for students and seniors.

Ninth grader earns major Boston Globe art award

By Abbey Stone and Simone McCarthy

Leandra Seward, a regional high school freshman, was awarded the Boston Globe Scholastic Art "Gold Key" Award for her photograph "Larger than Light" this month.

Leandra earned this award in the Digital Imaging category for students in seventh thru ninth grades. One hundred fifty photographs were awarded the Gold Key out of the 3,500 entries submitted in the New England region.

The gold and silver award winning entries are now on display at the Massachusetts Transportation Building in Boston. The gold-winning works will be moved to New York City for the National Scholastic Art Competition this spring.

Due to Presidents' Day and February vacation, the View will not publish again until March 10.

Tsunami Relief Fund

The MVRHS Art Department's Tsunami relief fund "With These Hands" recently donated $7,315.50 to a tsunami-relief organization.

The money was raised with proceeds from concerts as well as donations accumulated through the sale of student-made pottery and an anonymous matching grant.

Southeast Concert Invitations Arrive

By Samantha Rabin

After going through a rigorous audition process, three students from the regional high school succeeded in earning coveted spots in the Southeast District Music Festival concert. Jonathan Ryan, Becky Williams, and Emma Conley were accepted to the festival after auditions on November 20.

"Auditioning for Southeast is the most frightening thing that I [have ever done]," said Becky. "But being at the festivals makes it worth it. The people you meet there and the music you learn are things you'll never forget."

The Southeast Music Festival happens only once a year, but students begin preparing for the auditions weeks in advance. This year, when the Massachusetts Southeast junior and senior music auditions rolled around a dozen students from the Island put the final touches on their audition pieces and went into the audition rooms ready to compete for a spot in the festival's concert.

"You go into the audition room, shut the door behind you, and it's like there's no return," said sophomore Jennifer Barry of the auditions.

Auditions are held at the King Phillip Regional High School in Wrentham, Massachusetts.

"There are one or two judges [per room]. They grade the students in six different categories and the highest ranking scores get to perform in the festival," said music teacher Janis Wightman. "If a student is chosen, he or she will rehearse in Bridgewater State College for the concert, which takes place in January."

"The concert is a really good experience for students," Ms. Wightman said. "The chance to perform in front of a large audience is wonderful."

Earning a spot in the festival is no easy task. First, students must learn the piece of music. "Some kids practice and plan for the tryouts as soon as they hear about it, but I [did it] last minute" says sophomore Michael Gately.

For some, learning the music is the easy part, and the actual audition can be a real challenge.

"It was really scary. There were mobs of people there, and I was like 'how many people get chosen for this?' You feel like you have no chance," said Jennifer Barry.

Micheal Gately said, "It was nerve racking. You have half an hour [of waiting] to sit there and just think about every single thing that could go wrong."

After students sing the tryout piece, they must do some on the spot sight-reading. "The sight-reading was probably the hardest part," Michael said.

Although most of the auditioning students were nervous, everyone tried to keep the audition in perspective. "You have to remember, it is only one person's opinion on your voice, and you can't let that bring you down," said Jennifer.

"In a situation like this, it is normal for kids to be nervous," said Ms. Wightman. "In fact, kids are always nervous. They say 'Oh I really didn't do that well!' and then they make it. Even though the Southeast Festival tryout is quite competitive, it is a worthwhile experience."

Substitute Teachers Offer Much to School

By Duncan Pickard

Teachers, like students, are not expected to have perfect attendance at school. But when every one of the 90 class meetings per school year are so valuable, with frequent student absences what is done when a teacher is out?

"The expectation is that the learning experience will continue [when a teacher is absent] with a substitute teacher," said regional high school principal Peg Regan. "We try and match subs with the subjects that they are comfortable with to accommodate this."

Are substitute teachers and their jobs appreciated enough, both monetarily and by students?

Substitute teachers without teacher certification are paid $60 per six and one-half hour day for the first fifteen days of work, and $70 with certification for every day after 15. Compare that to five football officials that will be paid $75 next year for each three hour-long game they referee, according to the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association (MIAA).

"Subs have a difficult task to fill the place of any teacher," said junior Alex Parker. "They must be competent in the subject matter of the class. They work terribly hard and are not given due appreciation."

Referees, however, do require certification and are required to travel, which adds time devoted to that job. "[Referee] candidates go through a minimum of 20 hours [of] classroom training [and] take a written test," said Jim Rogers, secretary of the Cape Cod Football Officials Association. "Varsity officials are required to attend 12 hours of classroom time each year during the season."

Football officials are required to arrive an hour before the starting whistle of a football game, according to Mr. Rogers.

Martha's Vineyard Public Schools require substitutes to hold a bachelor's degree, although principals can make exceptions for student teachers.

Sub salaries are determined by the superintendent and are consistent throughout the Island, while referee salaries are suggested, but not mandated, by the MIAA's "Bluebook," distributed annually to principals and athletic directors of MIAA member schools.

"Subs will often show up to work around 7:20 am [school starts at 7:40 am] to get their assigned class for the day and prepare for the provided lesson," said Ms. Regan. "They leave with the rest of the school at 2:05 pm."

Generally, there are between four and six subs each day from Monday to Thursday and six to eight on Fridays, according to Ms. Regan.

Some substitutes have become active members of the teaching staff, according to Ms. Regan. "Many of our subs are loyal to the high school," said Ms. Regan. "Often the same subs are in school every day. Some students respond to subs better and develop better relationships with subs than with some of their regular teachers."

Junior Quinn Retmier is partial to Milton Briton. "Milton is one of those subs that you get excited when you see him walk in. He seems to understand students on a personal level," she said.

The stereotypical disciplinary issues with subs are sometimes a problem at the high school.

"When we have between eight and ten subs in the building there is a definite change to the school climate," said Ms. Regan. "Between students leaving class for extended periods of time on a pass and rules generally not being followed, there is a noticeable change."

"You can definitely feel a looser atmosphere in a class with a sub," said Alex. "Some subs are prayed upon by particular students."

Substitutes are also valuable in allowing a teacher to further his or her professional development without putting a class schedule in jeopardy. "Teachers often attend [professional] conferences on Fridays, when we, on average, have the most subs in school," said Ms. Regan.

"Expectations certainly vary," said Ms. Regan. "We can't expect a sub to teach Advanced Placement calculus. But a class with a sub is not a free day by any means."

"I certainly don't expect a sub to cover new content with a class," said science teacher Natalie Munn. "When I'm out I design the class as a work session for students to reinforce content."

Recently, there have been increasing national efforts to acknowledge substitute teachers and improve their teaching ability. For instance, the National Substitute Teachers Alliance was founded in 2000 to "promote dignity and respect for substitute teachers who provide educational continuity for our nation's students."

Skateboarding

Skateboarding is an art form. What brush you choose and what kind of picture you decide to paint is to be respected for what it is. A truly educated person doesn't judge an artist by his choice of brush, but by the beauty of the picture. And there is beauty in all varieties of skateboarding, from the classical surf-style to the modernist street. An educated skater is more likely to keep skating because he/she will know that there are different directions to take their art and they can always keep creating new, spontaneous works in whatever style.

Model United Nations illuminates political landscape

By Simone McCarthy

Eleven students from the regional high school's Model United Nations delegation attended a conference at Yale University last week as ambassadors of Denmark.

One thousand students from regions as far away as Lebanon, Turkey, and South Korea and as local as Chatham, MA, came together for the four-day conference in New Haven, CT.

Each delegation of students represented a country in the United Nations as they debated and cooperated with their fellow nations to resolve modern international problems.

"We had to put aside our own beliefs to adopt those of Denmark, and then take that to the next level as we worked to protect Denmark's interests and spread their opinions to other countries," said Alexis Morels, a sophomore and member of the MVRHS delegation. "It was like nothing I had ever done before."

After arriving at Yale University last Thursday, the delegates were greeted in an opening ceremony hosted by the Yale students who organized the conference. Guest speaker, David de Ferranti, vice president of the World Bank, began the ceremony by encouraging delegates to make collaboration in the face of cultural differences a theme of the conference.

The feasibility of this theme was tested as delegates from each country went to specialized committees to discuss a range of international issues, like the real United Nations.

Students had chosen the committee on which they would like to serve earlier during the school year. The delegates then did extensive research into Denmark's policies on the topics to be discussed in their committees.

The delegation also had to learn the precise procedural language used by the United Nations. In committee, students "motion for an unmoderated caucus" in order to speak directly to each other; they must ask other delegates "points of information" instead of questions, and raise placards to support motions or resolutions that are "on the floor," or being discussed.

The MVRHS delegates spent 14 hours in committee over the four days of the conference, representing Denmark in eight of the conference's 15 committees. Delegates discussed specific issues such as regulating the militarization of space or combating the AIDS epidemic in Africa.

"I formed an alliance with Yemen, Chile, and Egypt, and we solved a crisis about the Chinese violation of intellectual property rights concerning treatments for Malaria," said Meredith Curtis. "But we passed notes and played hangman, too."

Interaction with the 50 other participating schools was an aspect of the conference that the delegates and the Yale staff thought to be as important as the committee meetings.

"Living on the Island you know everyone. When we got to Yale Model United Nations there were a thousand people we didn't know," said junior Kelsey Perry. "In order to make [the conference] work, we had to put ourselves out there and meet new people. We made allies and friends."

The delegates did have time outside of committee to get to know other students and to become familiar with the Yale Campus and the city of New Haven.

The conference included a Yale Day, where students were encouraged to sit in on Yale courses and lectures including Calculus, the Origins of Western Civilization, and Introductory Russian. Tours also took the delegates all over the campus buildings, courtyards, and libraries and through the history of Yale.

"I got a taste for college life along with a greater sense of world issues," said Kelsey. "I really feel like I'm beginning to understand how and why different people hold so many different ideals."

Students are encouraged to wear red this Friday for the American Heart Association's national "Go Red for Women" campaign in support of women with cardiovascular disease.

When will it end?

The Martha's Vineyard Public Schools were cancelled all last week due to the snow storm. The schools must make up the five missed days in June, pushing the last day of school to June 28.

Any more snow days this year will not be need to be made up as the school's calendar only provided for the additional five snow days.

Silent Auction and Dinner

This Sunday at the Harbor View Hotel in Edgartown the Minnesingers are hosting a benefit Silent Auction.

The auction features vacation packages and island art.

The silent auction is at 5 pm and will be followed by dinner and later a live auction. The Minnesingers will perform at 6:15 pm.

Tickets are $35 per person. For advance tickets or more information, call Joanne Ryan at (508) 627-3165.

Fishing club breaks the ice

The MVRHS Fishing Club, new this year, sponsored a series of ice fishing trips on Island ponds, frozen over in eight to 10 inches of ice. Members of the club faced wind chills down to -20°F while catching 21 pickerel, two largemouth bass (the first largemouth Jeff Canha, the club's advisor, has pulled out of the ice in 30 years), and over 50 yellow perch. All fish caught were released and returned to the water. Eli Bonnell, senior, shows off his catch, a yellow perch, on Sengekontacket Pond (far left photo). With Their Hands, Students Support Relief Efforts

By Abbey Stone

Students at the regional high school are joining the international humanitarian effort to benefit the victims of the tsunamis in Southeast Asia.

Several students approached art teacher Scott Campbell about opportunities to support this effort through art. After some research, Mr. Campbell discovered a program called With These Hands, a collaboration of students and teachers that makes and sells pottery, giving the proceeds to the tsunami victims.

"We wanted to take earth, which is all that the people of Sri Lanka have left, and turn it into something useful," said Mr. Campbell.

Each sculpture that students make is stamped with a tiny handprint to distinguish the item as part of this program. They are completely local products, beginning with clay from West Tisbury and fashioned by regional high school students.

The pottery will be fired in a traditional fire pit. The pottery is buried in the ground and a fire is lit on top. When the fire is finished burning, the hole is dug out again, revealing beautiful pieces of blackware pottery.

This technique has been used in many cultures, from the local Wampanoags to the ancient Incas of South America.

Anna Convery, a sophomore, helped make miniature vases in her art class. "I love feeling a part of such a global effort," she said. "It's amazing to think that I can do something that seems so small but know that I am actually helping people to survive."

Mr Campbell's effort has reached across the Island. He went to the Edgartown School to teach students there how to make pottery.

"Working with these small children helped demonstrate the scope of what we're doing," said Mr. Campbell.

EMMA CONLEY PHOTOS

Regional high school art teacher Scott Campbell (left) instructs his students on how to make pottery, which is eventually sold to benefit victims of the tsunamis in Southeast Asia through the With These Hands program. Mary Liz van Nes, (right) junior, sculpts a piece of pottery for the project.

"A little boy asked me if he could give six cents in exchange for a vase. Six cents can be more than $6,000 if that's all you have."

"The process of repairing the damage caused by the tsunamis will go on for most of my life," said Mary Liz van Nes, a junior at the regional high school. "But even the little things help make a difference, so why not do everything you can."

The music department has agreed to donate the proceeds from their fifth annual All-Island Choral Festival on Thursday, January 13 to the art department's effort. Also, students will be manning a table at the festival with their pottery available to anyone who makes any donation.

"It's great that we can help other people in the world who really need it instead of just thinking about ourselves," said Mary Liz. "Doing it through art makes it much better. It's something that we are able to understand and see right away."

The MVRHS art club, which Mr. Campbell directs, plans on continuing this effort for another month, gaining support and contributions a little bit at a time. An anonymous Island resident has agreed to match all donations collected through With These Hands up to $5,000.

"It's a thrill to see such a huge response. It's amazing that people are able to freely give without any agenda or expectations other than to make a difference," said Mr. Campbell. "I can't help but be proud of our community and our country when people here are helping others halfway around the world."

New Mentorship Program Established

By Samantha Rabin

More students at the regional high school are becoming teachers — even before they graduate.

These students are involved in a program called 411, which introduces Island middle schoolers to current regional high school students in a mentorship environment during extracurricular activities.

"The high school students are trained to answer the younger students' more complicated questions," said Janice Baer, the director of the program.

The program, which is currently in its first year, involves about 20 high school students in assisting with after-school programs at Island middle schools. The program also prepares high school students to address topics such as sex and drugs, should the topics arise.

"Younger kids will feel more comfortable when their peers help to introduce them to sensitive subjects rather then teachers or adults," said sophomore Anna Markwica.

Ms. Baer hopes that the program will encourage middle schoolers to get involved in extracurricular activities.

"If high school students are in the after school program, then middle school students will be more likely to join," sophomore Hilary Wall said.

The 411 program is designed around activities that attract middle school students, such as football or book clubs. The high school students attend these programs as well, and are available to mentor the younger students.

Each elementary school offers after school programs Monday through Friday. "The high school kids will come up with ideas for the programs, like book clubs or football," Ms. Baer said. "They will then be assigned to one certain activity."

In late January or early February, the high school students involved in 411 will join the programs. "Once involved in the activity, the students will help out the leader of the activity and talk to any younger students who have questions," Ms. Baer said.

ABBEY STONE ILLUSTRATION

"You learn how to listen and talk to kids," said sophomore Evan Kavanagh, about the training sessions. "If any of the topics we talked about in training come up in a conversation — like relationships, or drugs — we know how to handle them."

All students are welcomed to join the 411 program. "We recruited kids through the guidance counselors at the regional high school, but anyone is welcome to join," Ms. Baer said.

"We are adamant that that the high school students come to all training sessions," Ms. Baer said, "but we are much more flexible when it comes to the actual after school programs. We know some students will be playing a sport when the season comes."

Planning for this program began in October when Ms. Baer was awarded a state grant to fund such a program.

Ms. Baer was curious as to what the response would be to the program in its first year, but she is enthusiastic about how the program has evolved.

"We have a great group of kids and they are really into it," said Ms. Baer.

you and your memories. I walk around the school hallways and look at the people. I look at the teachers and wonder why they're here. If they like their jobs. Or us. And I wonder how smart they were when they were fifteen. Not in a mean way. In a curious way. It's like looking at all the students and wondering who's had their heart broken that day and how they are able to cope with having three quizzes and a book report due on top of that. Or wondering who did the heart-breaking and wondering WHY.

Thanks to my parents for always keeping me on track.
Thanks to my brothers for helping me relax and not worry.
Thanks to my friends for making life as different from school as possible.

Memories: CC, Tennis, and Hockey. The Red Sox, Pats, C's, and Bruins. The EDG, CC Pride, and the SKLOG-Unit. My coaches and teammates especially Joe and Ned. "The Sklog-wagon will ride again!"

Before I came to this school, I wasn't sure what I wanted to do with my life. Looks like not much has changed(haha!). Over the past few years at this high school I have gained a lot. Wei-ther it be friends, life skills, or great memories.

Maybe I don't know exactly what I want to do with my life, but I have a good idea(animator? cartoonist? Special Fx designer? who knows?). Everyone of my friends and teachers I'll will miss deeply.

Pat Murphy(A.K.A. Dio!) - DDB competitions and the arrow!
Crystal (A.K.A. Munchkin)- You get a Face pinch, a bug, and a noogie...
Alex Whall (A.K.A. AwoI) - ... there is no spoon!
Jon Ryan (A.K.A. Fatts, JR) - Junior Gym Class! Only two fat guys!
The discovery of Pumpclops!!!
Marshall Pratt - No Boundaries sweatshirts 4 life(LOL)!!!!!111
Gus Whall(A.K.A. Gustavo) - ...more then mash potatoes... Byeeeeeeeee!
Bobby Good - The young grasshopper has turned into the master.
Meow?!?
Evan Wardell(A.K.A. Little Johnny Fire Bush) - The Next "D"
Jason - Yeaya!
Liz Tucker(A.K.A. AVIS) I love you Cous! Squeee!!!
Craig and Kevin - Homeroom Homies...
Sean Gilpin - You bad hair.

Mantra and Socks(coolest cats in the world)- Kitty Kitty Wah Wah!
Tiffany Johnson - My sweetie pie! JOY!
Pumpclops and Zygote - My babies...
Tim Luce - Happiest little bastard I know.
Bernier - Thanks for all your help! Greatest teacher ever!!!
Woody - A great friend, thanks for being a fan of my toons!
Whitney - Mason Vs. Whitney!! Battle of the Century!!!
Jim Kalambokis - My mentor... Coolest dude I know!
Mason - Enigma Cartoons programmer(We will finish this project or else.. eerr... if else(){})
And my Dad... for always being there for me and pushing me all the way. Thanks Dad.
